COMPLEX ILLNESSES –
ENVIRONMENTAL MEDICINE
SCIENCE MEETS PRACTISE

24th – 25th April 2010

Kolping-Akademie
Kolpingplatz 1
97070 Würzburg / Germany

Since years inflammation, oxidative and nitrosative stress have been subjects of interest for clinical practicing environmental medicine as well as for diagnosing as for therapy of chronic multisystem illnesses caused by the environment.

An increasing amount of international publications concerning neuro-endocrine-immune system deal these topics scientifically. Scientific publications which report on complexity of illnesses, on individual vulnerability and susceptibility as well as on illnesses from toxic longtime low-dose burden increase too.

Choosing contents and international lecturers for this congress EUROPAEM wants to stress that these subjects are almost scientifically state of the art. For clinical practicing environmental medicine these findings are basic knowledge since years. But neither awareness nor acceptance is given by the general medicine, social insurance system and the social welfare law yet.

By discussing scientific findings on the field of neuro-endocrine-immune complex illnesses and the experiences in clinical practicing environmental medicine scientific common features of those functional feedback control systems are regarded.
